Why does it matter?

When you or your loved ones need health care, you want care providers you can trust—providers that offer safe, high-quality care. Health care providers accredited by Accreditation Canada have met our national standards of quality. They are committed to making sure you receive the best care possible.

What is health care accreditation?

Accreditation is a process of assessing health services against standards, to identify what is being done well and what needs to be improved. More than 1,000 health care and social services providers across Canada use our accreditation program to thoroughly evaluate and continually improve their services.

What does it mean when a provider chooses to be accredited?

When you see the Accreditation Canada certificate or banner, it means the health care provider is taking that extra step, investing time and resources to meet rigorous standards. These providers have put policies, processes, and practices in place to help minimize risk and deliver safer care.

Accreditation Canada

Accreditation Canada is an independent, not-for-profit organization that consults with experts to develop health care standards based on best practices. We accredit a wide range of health care and social services providers, including hospitals, nursing homes, long-term care facilities, clinics, and community health programs. Accreditation Canada has been helping providers improve health care quality and safety for more than 55 years.

Choose a health care provider accredited by Accreditation Canada. Because quality health care matters.
